

I object to the possibility that the FCC would consider supporting the NAB in its efforts to repress satellite radio services, such as XM and Sirius, from providing their current full range of listener services. I enjoy the ability to listen to my favorite stations on long drives, and especially find the local weather and traffic information to be highly valuable. If the NAB would concentrate more on enhancing their own services instead of opposing those who do it better, they wouldn't have to worry about the impact of satellite radio. I pay for my XM service and don't think anybody should restrict what I hear.
